Issue 67, October 14, 2015

It's that time of year again! Welcome to all the riders, crews and spectators who are here for this year's Australian Motorcycle Grand Prix.

The Ramada has lots going on over the weekend with live music, special guests and great food all weekend. Locals and visitors to the Island are all welcome.

On quite a different note, Bimbadeen, an historic farm in Ventnor that has been operating for 80 years, has plans to run tours and educational experiences for the community. It's also started a free range egg service available to the Island and San Remo (details pg 3).

See you all in a fortnight.

The 360 acre farming property, 'Bimbadeen', located in Ventnor has been owned and run by the Davie family since 1955. It was first used for a dairy and pigs and then grass fed beef. Bob and Anne Davie have cared for Bimbadeen for over 60 years, and now in their 80th year birthday celebration they are supporting a new Bimbadeen so that their true love can be shared with the community and visitors to the island.

Bimbadeen has won many State and National prizes both for the quality of its produce and its commitment to sustainability and the environment. When the first Europeans came to Phillip Island in 1842 they set fire to the island, end to end. Nearly 145 years later Phillip Island Landcare formed in 1987, one of the first in Victoria. This partnership has seen Bimbadeen plant over 70,000 trees, ground-cover, protected remnant vegetation, created a wildlife corridor, fenced waterways and dams and address salinity issues.

However, even with today's high cattle prices, the farm cannot survive in the long term without diversifying and when many farms are being sold or subdivided, Bimbadeen is creating a different future.

As part of the new direction for Bimbadeen, free-range eggs will be produced from November. The hens will roam the paddocks during the day before roosting in their mobile chicken caravan at night. We are hoping to sell all our eggs locally – straight from our paddocks to your plate.

Another part of the new direction for Bimbadeen is it becoming part of the Island tourism experience. Farm and educational tours will be offered for the first time and a permit is currently being sought for farm stay accommodation.

We would like visitors to relax, enjoy and learn from their time on a working farm – the walk to the top of Hurricane Hill – the second highest point on the Island – to take in 270 degree views including Western Port and Bass Strait will be one of many activities Bimbadeen has to offer.

Free range eggs: available early November with free delivery for regular orders to Phillip Island and San Remo.*

“Penguin Chirpy Chicks” head to Altona & Gippsland Classrooms

Phillip Island Nature Parks has just been given a significant boost, thanks to funding from ExxonMobil Australia.

ExxonMobil has provided funds which will allow Phillip Island Nature Parks’ team of Education Rangers the opportunity to visit schools in metropolitan Melbourne and regional Victoria.

Kim Dunstan, Education Coordinator with Phillip Island Nature Parks said “We have been fortunate enough to receive great support from ExxonMobil over many years. As a result, we have been able to design and distribute seal and penguin education resources to thousands of Victorian kindergarten and school students. We have just printed the latest in our range of books entitled What Animal am I?, and this new grant means we can really engage with students about the life of a Little Penguin.”

“Our team of Education Rangers will conduct a series of school incursions titled ‘Little Penguins – Chirpy Chicks’ in both Altona and Gippsland Primary Schools, and we hope to expand that program even further in years to come,” concluded Kim.

Students become research assistants by weighing, measuring and scanning penguin plush toys, touching and feeling taxidermy penguins and dressing up in a penguin suit to discover penguin adaptations. Along the way they discover the many threats facing little penguins and feel empowered to take action to help protect our marine environment.

Happy Feat - Giant Pandas & Little Penguins Mates for Life

The Victorian Government signed a landmark 'sister park' agreement yesterday between Phillip Island Nature Parks and Chengdu Giant Panda Breeding Centre.

Touring the Giant Panda Breeding Centre at Chengdu, Victorian Premier Daniel Andrews witnessed the signing of a new Memorandum of Understanding between the two conservation centres.

The new relationship between the Phillip Island and Chengdu Parks will enable valuable opportunities for both organisations to share their knowledge and research, as well as staff exchange and development.

The Nature Park and Panda Breeding Centre are recognised leaders in conservation and eco-tourism, and their common goals and values provide the perfect foundation for transnational collaboration. Both organisations are committed to conservation management, world-leading research, and education, to ensure the ongoing survival of a number of species.

Phillip Island Nature Parks hosts more than 1.2 million visitors each year and is one of Australia's leading nature-based ecotourism operators. The Penguin Parade attracts more than 150,000 visitors from China annually, and is the number one attraction in Victoria for Chinese tourists.

The Panda Breeding Centre has a strong history of international cooperation, previously working with zoos and universities in Japan, Spain, France and the US. These relationships have helped to further giant panda breeding, protection, research and education; resulting in 15 giant pandas successfully born in captivity at the centre.

Phillip Island Nature Parks has a similarly successful history of species conservation. Its efforts to protect and enhance the little penguin colony at Phillip Island has seen the population grow from 12,000 breeding birds in 1984 to more than 30,000 in 2015.

Today's agreement builds on a cooperative arrangement made between Victoria and Sichuan

Province earlier this year, designed to foster collaboration and friendship.

Joining the Premier at Chengdu today, the Phillip Island Nature Parks Chief Executive Officer, Matthew Jackson announced an exciting world-first interactive Antarctic experience that will open at Phillip Island in December, 2015, in partnership with WWF-Australia. Visitors to the 'Antarctic Journey' at the Nobbies Centre will find themselves completely immersed in a breathtaking and captivating multimedia experience that will put them right at the heart of all the action.

Quotes attributable to Premier of Victoria, Daniel Andrews

"This is an incredible opportunity for two of the world's dedicated conservation warriors to come together to share research, experience and facilities for creatures great and small."

"This relationship won't only facilitate new opportunities for Phillip Island researchers, but it'll provide another means of promotion to another of Victoria's world-class nature attractions."

"Adelaide may have Wang Wang and Funi, but we have a parade of penguins and now - their new Giant Panda cousins in Chengdu."

Get Growing

Ideas & tips from a time poor gardener

I've had an epiphany. Just recently I realised that not everything that you grow in the garden has to be edible. This may not sound like enlightenment to most of you out there in 'reasonable land' but from someone with my heritage it's ground breaking news. Basically I was brought up believing that the meaning of life revolves around food. So for me, this eye opening experience has been a real shackle breaker.

With the recent warm and sunny weather I've managed (and had the motivation) to scavenge a few hours here and there out in the garden and it has been quite delightful. Maybe my frozen brain has finally started to thaw which has allowed me to begin seeing the garden in a whole new light.

While visiting local plant suppliers over the past couple of weeks I've seen so many new and scrumptious (sorry!) coloured hybrids of old time favourites like violas and pansies that I've not been able to help myself and have snuck out of the store with a pot or two of colour.

I've nestled the little cuties amongst some gorgeous flowering salvias and geraniums which has transformed a section of my vegetable garden into quite a cottagey little scene.

The sense of satisfaction and fulfilment you get from growing your own food is undeniable. However, the kind of joy that you receive from tending to plants that are visually beautiful is quite a different experience again that provides its own unique pleasure.

STRIKING A CHORD

For seasoned guitar players, or those of you who enjoy a casual strum, local guitar teacher Dean Luke, shares tips, advice and news about all things guitar.

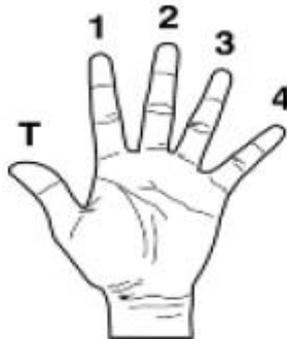

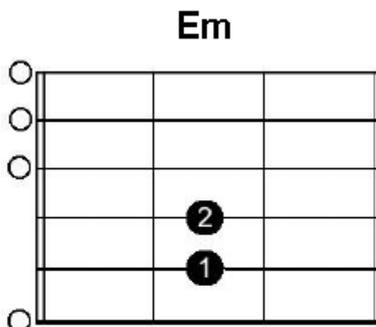

EM CHORD WITH DOWN STRUMS

In the previous issue of this beginner series we looked at how to hold the guitar pick and the guitar. Now we will be moving onto some easy chords and simple strumming.

We are going to be starting with an E minor chord (commonly written as Em) with down strums. By down strums I mean strumming in a downward motion towards the floor from the lowest strings to the highest strings.

The chord chart below represents an Em chord. The upright columns represent the first three frets of the guitar and the horizontal lines represent the strings, the line at the very top of the chord chart represents the high E string while the line down the very bottom represents the low E.

The two black dots with numbers in them represent where you put your fingers and on what strings and frets, and the numbers within the dots represent the fingers you use.

We are going to be fretting the above Em chord with our 1st finger on the A string in the 2nd fret and our 2nd finger on the D string in the 2nd fret.

Then we are going to strum this chord with 8 down strums counting them out as we go. See how many lots of 8 down strums you can do in a row!

Stay tuned for the next issue of this beginner series where we will be looking at more simple chords to add to your new repertoire!

What's Cooking?

Simple, delicious recipes.
No experience necessary.

Greek Meatballs

A variation on the Aussie rissole, these Greek meatballs are a tasty treat and serve a variety of purposes. Roll them into small balls and enjoy with a drink or you can flatten them out on the barbecue and they become delicious hamburgers.

What you need

1kg minced beef
1 onion, grated
1 clove garlic, finely chopped
1 egg
1/2 cup breadcrumbs
1 teaspoon bicarb soda (this makes the meatballs light and airy)
Handful each of chopped fresh parsley, mint & oregano
Salt & pepper

What you do

Place all the ingredients in a large mixing bowl and combine thoroughly. You can use a large fork or spoon but to get it really blended you're best off to use your hand to mix. A visceral experience to enjoy.

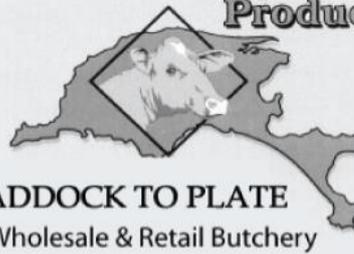

Grab about 2 tablespoons full of mixture and roll into a ball. Coat the balls in plain flour and set aside.

Heat some olive oil in a frying pan and shallow fry for a few minutes and turn once until the meatballs are a dark golden colour. Drain on absorbent paper.

If you are serving as hamburgers, then make the meatballs as large as your buns (oooh er), flatten out and cook on the barbecue as you would regular hamburgers.

THE TRIAL OF THE PRIESTLY KILLER

On October 15, 1969, the Verrachio bust of St. Augustine vanished from the Oratorio di san Lorenzo in Palermo, Sicily. The Verrachio, as it is commonly known, is one of the few by Leonardo Da Vinci's famous teacher Antonio Carraro, to survive the centuries. Sculptured in 1650, while he was a fugitive from justice, wanted by papal authorities in Rome for killing a man during a swordfight. For more than four decades, the piece has been the most sought after sculpture in the world, yet its exact whereabouts, even its fate, have remained a mystery. Until now ...

Lord Andrews, the sixteenth Earl of Pakenham, had amassed one of the finest private collections of Renaissance art in England. A notorious recluse, the Earl seldom ventured off his estate and hardly ever allowed outside eyes to view his priceless works. When he got to hear along a nefarious grapevine that the Augustinian Fathers in Sicily were considering selling the statue the Earl jumped at the chance and was prepared to offer a huge sum of money to acquire the statue.

Late one afternoon, a black van drove through the gates of Dawn Manor, a very old English manor, bringing the statue for a formal appraisal and perhaps an informal offer. The Earl met his overnight guests at the door. Father Pringle, a grim visaged hooded man, introduced himself.

'Lord Andrews, I must warn you. I am opposed to this transaction. The bust was a gift to our order from the artist himself. To sell it would be a grave sacrilege.'

The Earl stood tall and unmoved by what he perceived as a blatant lie, but after all, they were in a sense all cut from the same sack cloth.

'That's your opinion. Don't tell me you drove the statue all the way in that van? What about security?'

'The Lord is our security,' Pringle replied. 'And Father Vito.' He pointed to his companion, a hooded priest about the same imposing size as himself but with a fierce scar running across one cheek. The two friars carried a wooden crate through the hall and into the library and carefully unveiled the life-size bust.

'Stunning,' a voice whispered from the shadows. 'Oh. Sorry to startle.' A plump man waddled forward. 'I'm Marcus Waters, auction-house appraiser. Lord Andrew brought me in to authenticate and advise. It's the Verrocchio, all right,' he added after a minute's worth of inspection.

The foursome left the statue in the protection of an aging guard while the host led his guests on a tour.

'The house has a Catholic background, you'll be pleased to hear.' The second earl of Pakenham was a devout Roman Catholic. During the reign of Henry VIII, he took in several priests, hiding them from the King's wrath. 'I assume you want to see my collection,' he added reluctantly and showed them into the exhibition rooms.

When the museum tour was over, the host and his guests retired to refresh themselves and dress for dinner. It was during this break, while all were alone in different parts of the manor, that the crime took place.

The butler walked by the library and discovered the guard stumbling groggily about. The Verrocchio was missing from its wooden stand. It had been replaced by a Chinese pot. Immediately, the butler sounded the alarm. Within minutes the entire household had assembled.

'Got hit,' the guard grumbled, massaging a welt on the back of his head. 'Knocked me down, but not out. I saw...'

'Saw what?' Marcus Waters demanded. 'Who took the statue?'

The old guard, Keith Sinclair, didn't answer. He was too busy clutching his arm, then his chest, and then collapsing to the parquet floor under the impact of a massive heart attack.

'Priest stole.'

'Priest?' Lord Andrews shouted. 'Which priest? Both of them?'

'No.' The guard shook his head in frustration, his face growing beet-red. 'Priest stole.' He pointed towards Father Pringle standing by the spot where the statue had rested. 'Here. Understand.'

Those were to be the last words Keith Sinclair uttered. Within seconds he was dead, leaving Father Pringle to face one count of theft and one count of murder. The statue was never found and two months later the friar was brought to trial in the Old Bailey, accused by the last words of a dying man. Father Pringle might have had the Lord on his side but he was also to be aided by Leroy Cunningworth Q.C. the famed English advocate and The Vibe's resident barrister.

DELIBERATIONS

You as a reader of The Vibe have to deliberate and decide on the guilt of the Augustinian father. It's a daunting task. Is he guilty or not?

When the case came to trial, the statue was still missing. You and a few other jury members feel uneasy about convicting anyone until after the statue is recovered. Also several nagging questions cast doubt on Father Pringle's guilt.

And what about the Chinese pot? Why Father Pringle or anybody would put a Chinese pot on the stand.

Other nagging questions focus attention of Keith Sinclair, the dead guard. Although he pointed in the defendant's direction. He never actually accused Father Pringle. And then there were his last words. "Priest stole. Here. Understand." Was he able to see the face inside what was probably a largely concealing hood? And what did he want them to understand?

(See what the jury decides on Page 15).

Issue 67 - Jury Deliberation & Verdict: The Trial of the Priestley Killer

DELIBERATIONS

You as a reader of The Vibe have to deliberate and decide on the guilt of the Augustinian father. It's a daunting task. Is he guilty or not?

When the case came to trial, the statue was still missing. You and a few other jury members feel uneasy about convicting anyone until after the statue is recovered. Also several nagging questions cast doubt on Father Pringle's guilt.

And what about the Chinese pot? Why Father Pringle or anybody would put a Chinese pot on the stand?

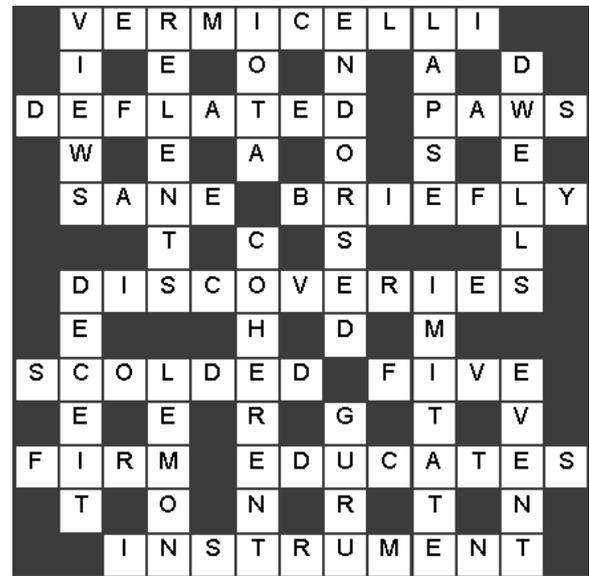

Other nagging questions focus attention on Keith Sinclair, the dead guard. Although he pointed in the defendant's direction he never actually accused Father Pringle. And then there were his last words: "Priest stole. Here. Understand." Was he able to see the face inside what was probably a largely concealing hood? And what did he want them to understand?

VERDICT

As the foreman read back Keith Sinclair's last words, a juror slightly hard of hearing heard something different. "Priest's whole" maybe said "priest's hole, not priest stole". Yes, of course. Another jury member recalls that priests' holes are hiding places in many old English houses; concealed places where priests once hid from the authorities.

Suddenly the case makes sense. The guilty party is likely to be Lord Andrews, the only member of the foursome who would know where a priest's hole could be found in Dawn Manor and possibly short of money with which to pay for the piece or just plain greedy and wanting it for nothing. The good Lord would have placed the statue in the priest's hole, directly under the parquet floor. That's what Keith Sinclair had meant by "understand": the priest's hole was underneath the stand.

You send a note to the judge and soon afterwards a search is made of the manor - the jury member was right and the statue was right where he said it would be. That's all the proof the jury needed to find Father Pringle NOT GUILTY.

As for returning the statue to the monastery well that would be a matter for the lawyers to fight out another day, after all, can you own what's been stolen, provided of course it had been stolen decades earlier?

Most places on the Island and San Remo now stock Vibes so you can take your very own copy home with you. Try some of these places: supermarkets, general stores, cafés, petrol stations, takeaway food outlets, tourist info centres, bakeries, caravan parks. And if you know someone on the mainland who's after a copy they can pick one up at the Shott Café in Wonthaggi.

A Winning Beginning

Give your child a great start to lifelong learning at Newhaven College.

A small number of places are available in Prep and Year 1 in 2016 and 2017. Some vacancies exist across other year levels through to Year 12.

With just two classes in each year level, our small Junior School numbers allow for a differentiated curriculum which helps our youngest students learn and build confidence amongst children of similar abilities. We pride ourselves on our holistic approach to the individual growth of every child. We are very lucky to enjoy spacious grounds, a naturally stimulating environment and new architect designed flexible learning spaces.

Ralph Arceo commenced as Head of Junior School in 2014, bringing with him a wealth of leadership experience across academic, pastoral and administrative areas. Ralph taught at Trinity Grammar in New South Wales followed by 12 years at Camberwell Grammar School before his family's move to Bass Coast.

"My vision is for the Junior School is to be committed to providing an environment that is safe, supportive and welcoming. One which values the diversity of our school and the wider community", Ralph said. "Our aim is to give every student in our care the best possible education to prepare them for life beyond school."

While the teaching of literacy and numeracy is a core component of the curriculum, there is also a strong focus on social, emotional and physical development.

Newhaven has an excellent record of academic achievement and offers a wide variety of co-curricular activities which include a highly regarded music and drama program, numerous sporting opportunities, a long established House program, a well-defined code of behaviour, and a strong sense of community.

Prep & Year 1 Vacancies

Newhaven College is an independent co-educational school offering a comprehensive and seamless education for students from Prep through to Year 12. Our Junior School offers a caring and nurturing environment to provide young learners with big opportunities.

A small number of places are currently available in Prep and Year 1 in 2016 & 2017.

For enrolment enquiries, contact Kelly Fuery on 5956 7505 (option 1) or visit www.newhavencol.vic.edu.au
