What's New On The Island...

The Vibe is always out and about checking out what's happening around The Rock. In this issue we visit Once Bitten Twice Smitten, and chat with local marriage celebrant Cheryl Warry about love, marriage and life's unpredictability.

With any major life change we always want the transition to go smoothly and joyfully. Traditionally, the wedding day has taken on a fairy tale status, promising to be the happiest day of your life. In truth, unrealistic expectations and complicated organisational gymnastics can place so much stress on a couple that the beauty of the actual ceremony can sometimes become distracted.

Cheryl Warry is a professional and experienced celebrant who understands the importance of keeping the marriage ceremony focussed, yet tailored to the individual desires of each couple to ensure a magical day. No two people are the same, so there is no 'one size fits all' marriage ceremony.

Having worked extensively both locally and internationally as a facilitator, presenter and public speaker, Cheryl has gained huge experience and insight into the dynamics of human relationships, allowing her to quickly identify the needs of her clients so she can work with them to create a ceremony that is unique and fulfilling.

Cheryl also acknowledges that love isn't always reliable; finding a life partner first time round doesn't happen for everyone - hence her business name, Once Bitten Twice Smitten. It's also testament to Cheryl's positive and upbeat philosophy on life which shines through no matter how quiet or ostentatious the ceremony she is presenting.

A vibrant personality and easy going nature are an obvious fit for becoming a celebrant. But it's more than that. Cheryl truly believes in the institution of marriage and has a strong family history that fosters similar values. Both Cheryl's parents and parents-in-laws have each received letters from the Queen and Australian Prime Minister when they celebrated their 60th wedding anniversaries, while Cheryl has been married for over 30 years herself.

Perhaps the most significant (and first) ceremony Cheryl performed was actually at her son's wedding. At the commencement of the ceremony, the celebrant became unexpectedly unwell and was not able to proceed. Cheryl immediately jumped in and delivered the ceremony herself as she couldn't bear to see her daughter-in-law's hard work and enthusiasm jeopardised. It was perhaps this experience with her own children that fuelled her motivation to help other couples achieve their own happiness.

While Cheryl works all over the Mornington Peninsula, Dandenong Ranges, Yarra Valley and Melbourne, Phillip Island is a natural destination for her work. Cheryl and her husband live on a farm in Bass and have been holidaying on the Island forever. Cheryl finds the beauty and varied landscape of the Island a treasure trove of marriage backdrops with an abundance of variety to suit any couple.

Likewise Cheryl has an endless supply of poems, vows, songs and formats if you need a bit of inspiration or direction. She even has an informative blog which provides tips and advice about including mothers and fathers of the bride and groom who wish to play a more substantial role in the ceremony. But if you've got your big day already sorted, then Cheryl would be delighted to work with you to make it happen.

So whether you're a total control freak with every last bit of confetti name tagged, a shambolic mess who can't even imagine how you'll tumble down the aisle, or perhaps, like most of us, somewhere in between, Cheryl will ensure that your marriage ceremony is seamless. Relax and enjoy. It's your special day after all.

Final Four Bandicoots Released onto Churchill Island

Four Eastern Barred Bandicoots were released onto Churchill Island on Friday night, completing the trial release of Eastern Barred Bandicoots that began in August.

The remaining four bandicoots of the trial were released by Phillip Island Nature Parks researchers and joined the eight male and eight female bandicoots that have called Churchill Island home since August.

"The bandicoots released on Friday night were all females in order to balance the sex ratio on Churchill Island and to maximise effective population size," explained Duncan Sutherland, Phillip Island Nature Parks Deputy Research Manager.

"They were captured at Mount Rothwell Biodiversity Interpretation Centre on Thursday night, then vet checked, given parasite treatment, microchipped, and genetically tested before release. This ensures their best chance for survival and confirms their genetic relationship with the other Eastern Barred Bandicoots on Churchill Island."

The release was supported by staff from Mt Rothwell Biodiversity Interpretation Centre and the Eastern Barred Bandicoot Recovery Team made up of representatives from Department of Environment, Land, Water and Planning, Mount Rothwell Biodiversity Interpretation Centre, Parks Victoria, Phillip Island Nature Parks, Zoos Victoria, Conservation Volunteers Australia and The University of Melbourne.

And it is hoped that the new arrivals will fit in as well as the original sixteen. "The existing population on Churchill is going really well," says Duncan. "Our monitoring shows that they have been moving around the whole island and are in excellent condition. They are already breeding as we have recorded pouch young and young at foot."

Considered extinct in the wild on the mainland since 1991, this small marsupial has been surviving behind predator-proof fences designed to keep them safe from foxes and feral cats. Thanks to Phillip Island Nature Parks' efforts over the past 10 years to ensure Churchill Island is fox and feral-cat free, the 57-hectare island in Victoria's east is considered to be an ideal habitat for Eastern Barred Bandicoots.

The trial release is part of a wider program aimed at saving the Eastern Barred Bandicoot from extinction, including a $146,800 gene pool widening project that will mix captive-bred Eastern Barred Bandicoots from Victoria with individuals from the Tasmanian sub-species to increase genetic diversity amongst the Victorian population, which has suffered due to their critically low population size.

Follow regular updates on the Churchill Island bandicoots at www.penguins.org.au.

STRIKING A CHORD

For seasoned guitar players, or those of you who enjoy a casual strum, local guitar teacher Dean Luke, shares tips, advice and news about all things guitar.

lots of 8 down strums you can do in a row!

Stay tuned for the next issue of this beginner series where we will be looking at another new chord to add to your already expanding repertoire!

BEGINNER SERIES ASUS2 CHORD WITH DOWN STRUMS

In the previous issue of this beginner series we looked at playing an Em chord with down strums. Now we will be moving onto an Asus2 chord, another simple chord we will be playing with down strums.

An Asus2 chord is a type of A chord with a suspended 2nd. We won't be going too much into this theoretical stuff just yet, but that's what it means in case you were wondering :).

The chord chart below represents an Asus2 chord. Just like with the previous chord chart, the upright columns represent the first three frets of the guitar and the horizontal lines represent the strings, the line at the very top of the chord chart represents the high e string while the line down the very bottom represents the low E.

The two black dots with numbers in them represent where you put your fingers and on what strings and frets, and the numbers within the dots represent the fingers you use.

Asus2

We are going to be fretting the above Asus2 chord with our 1st finger on the D string in the 2nd fret and our 2nd finger on the G string in the 2nd fret. As you can see the chord shape is just like the Em chord except one string lower.

Just like the Em we are going to strum this chord with 8 down strums counting them out as we go, see how many

Rabbits, Rabbits and more Rabbits

There's no doubt that the Island is just about overrun with rabbits. While it may not be everyone's cup of tea, rabbit recipes are making somewhat of a comeback in selected culinary circles. Local writer (and cook) Ian Burns has spent the last few years doing his bit to help eradicate rabbits from his neighbours' farms and has cooked up some tasty dishes along the way. Join Ian as he shares some of his rabbit recipes. And if rabbit is your culinary meat of choice, he's happy for you to contact him for fresh stock.

Story, photograph & recipes courtesy of Ian Burns, M: 0458 277 979

As you are aware, there are LOTS of rabbits on Phillip Island!!

In most cases, people see them as harmless, and enjoy seeing them hopping around. To a farmer, or the home vegie garden, they are a pest. So much so, that some farmers have literally hundreds of them on their property.

The DES, Department of Environment & Sustainability, systematically poison rabbits all over the Island. They use pindone, a poison put into oats that are placed in a shallow trench. The rabbit dies very quickly.

In some cases, "mixie" is still used, but rarely nowadays. This is a debilitating virus that slowly kills the rabbit (spread with a flea or mosquito). "Mixie" rabbits are easily identified by puffy eyes, slow movements and very poor condition physically.

As a member of the SSAA (Sporting Shooters Association of Australia), I have permission from various land owners on The Island to shoot rabbits. They die a quick humane death. All rabbits I shoot are eaten, by friends, family and other relatives. As a hunter of some fifty odd years I recognize a healthy rabbit, or conversely, on a rare occasion, a sick one.

Here are some of my favourite rabbit recipes.

RABBIT QUICHE

Ingredients

1 large rabbit
2-3 leaves of silverbeet
2 brown onions
1 small carrot
Grated cheese
3 sticks of celery
2 tomatoes
1 tsp cumin powder
Pinch of turmeric & chili
Short & puff pastry
8 eggs

Method

Soak rabbit in salt water & white vinegar for an hour, prior to cooking. This removes any bruising and blanches the meat slightly.

Cook rabbit until meat is just about falling off the bone. I use a pressure cooker and cook for just over an hour but you can steam or boil if desired.

Strip the meat from bones and put to one side.

Cut all vegies up small and put a layer into a large pie dish, already lined with baking paper and short pastry.

Put a layer of grated cheese, then a layer of shredded rabbit meat. Sprinkle cumin over meat, then a little turmeric. Season with salt, black pepper and chili.

Add another layer of vegie mix. Slice a tomato, place on top of vegies.

Continue layering process until almost at top of dish.

Whip up the eggs, slowly pour over the whole pie and let it seep through total mix.

Put your "top" on the pie, the puff pastry. Trim to look neat.

Press sides with fork, score the top a little also. Brush on a whipped egg to give golden brown finish when cooked.

Cook for 1 hour at 180-190c, until golden brown.

RABBIT STIR FRY

Any rabbit and vegies left over, put into a hot oiled fry-pan. Add a dash of soy sauce, add black pepper, a pinch of turmeric, sprinkle with olive oil. Whip up an egg, slowly pour in and mix together with your vegies and rabbit.

Cook for 10 minutes or so and serve with some rice.

YUMMY!

“I’m Melting! Melting!... who would have thought a good girl like you could destroy my beautiful wickedness...”

Most people have seen The Wizard of Oz at least once in their life time. We’re happy to go on the journey with Dorothy, Toto, Tin Man, Scarecrow and Lion on their quest to gain their own self worth from the almighty Oz, all the time shadowed by the ever looming presence of the Wicked Witch of the West. I must say, that the first time I saw The Wizard of Oz I was a little underwhelmed by how easy it was for Dorothy to destroy the Wicked Witch.

She splashed a bit of water on her. Really?? Her almighty evilness meekly melted into a puddle, a whiff of smoke and was gone forever.

The other thing to ponder is: how bleak and problematic life would have been for the Wicked Witch given that her existence and water formed a lethal mix. No wonder she was cross. For a start, she would have been massively dehydrated; I’m surprised her skin was so plump and youthful, albeit a little green.

But equally as traumatic for her was that she obviously couldn’t take a shower. She would have smelt really bad. Maybe that’s the real reason she didn’t have any friends. Except for those flying monkeys; she probably let them hang around not only to fulfil her evil doings but also to mask her hideous stench.

THE TRIAL OF CHICAGO MAY

By Leon Herbert

Most of my stories are imaginative especially of the whodunit genre, but sometimes I have fastened them loosely, sometimes very loosely, around real life dramas in the criminal courts, with a fondness for celebrated ones in the hallowed precincts of London's criminal court, the Old Bailey.

A case in point was a real life drama reported when I was a student. It concerned a vicious shooting affray in a London Street. The prisoners were two: a man and a woman. They provided a remarkable contrast in character, although it would be difficult to say which was the more reprehensible. I hope readers of The Vibe will appreciate the story I have put together of this outrageous couple and the crimes they committed. This time readers will not be called to act as jurors as you fail the age test!!

The woman was charged under the name of May Vivienne Churchill, but she was better known to the police of two continents and to the newspaper readers of the world as Chicago May. Few women who have stood in the Old Bailey dock have had a better claim to beauty. Even though she was by then approaching middle age, Chicago May had the figure of a Gaiety Girl, red hair that Titian would have painted with enthusiasm and a smile that was designed to captivate her worst enemy, and frequently did.

The prisoner that stood beside her was a sulky and rather undersized young man who was obviously terrified of the fate that awaited him. He was Charles Smith, Chicago May's current lover. The charge was shooting with intent to kill Eddie Guerin, who was possibly the most famous professional criminal of the time because he was one of the very few men who had ever succeeded in escaping from the French penal colony of Devil's Island and lived to tell the tale.

The crime for which Eddie Guerin had been sent there was the real origin of the shooting which brought May and Smith to the Old Bailey, although the reason why it should have done so was never made clear in the evidence.

May was born in Ireland. She immigrated to the United States about 1900 and was for a time a chorus girl in "The Belle of New York". She made a rich but unfortunate marriage, became a dope addict, and lost her stage job. Soon she was living in Chicago with Eddie Guerin, a thief and trickster with a long record of imprisonments in both Europe and America.

When the United States became too hot for the two they came to Britain where they both indulged in blackmail and robbery in order to obtain the capital for a major coup which had long interested Guerin. This was to rob the safe of the American Express Company in Paris. It was known that very large sums in many currencies and in gold were kept there for the firm's wealthy tourist clients.

The robbery was carried out without much trouble, but someone in the underworld evidently "narked" and both May and Guerin were arrested. Guerin was sentenced to life imprisonment but May, using that innocent smile on the responsive

French, was regarded as just a dupe and got off with a three year sentence. Guerin somehow managed to secure a remission of his sentence.

As soon as she was out of prison she came to London where she launched the biggest blackmail campaign the Metropolitan Police had ever had to tackle. With a corps of "husbands" to burst in at the appropriate moment to exert the necessary pressure to extract money, she set about captivating every man of rank and wealth she could entice with her charm and chatter.

How many men were bled white by this gang will never be known, for the police were discreet about the letters they found in May's Northumberland Avenue flat from men in high public office, well known in legal circles, and in the Peerage.

Smith was probably one of May's blackmail operators as well as her lover when Guerin reached England and inferred he felt entitled to share the proceeds of May's exploits. She did not agree and took steps to silence her one-time lover for good.

She knew Guerin was living with a woman in the Bloomsbury district. Late one June night in 1907 she was sitting with Smith in a cab that slowly meandered around the streets of that area. Then, in Russell Square, she saw Guerin strolling along the pavement towards the tube station.

At May's cry of triumph, Smith leaped from the cab and fired six shots at Guerin, who hobbled to cover, hit in the foot. A constable immediately gave chase and Smith aimed the revolver at him, pulling the trigger on a fortunately empty chamber. Both May and he were in custody a few minutes after the attack.

The only possible defence was that Smith had no intention of killing but wished merely to scare Guerin, despite the fact that his aim had been so bad the plea was not proven. Nor was there any sympathy for Chicago May who tried to show that she had learned Guerin intended to burn her face with vitriol unless she returned to him.

The famous Mr. Justice Darling was the judge, and he imposed a sentence of fifteen years on May, who smiled and bowed to the Court, as if she was making her exit from the stage after prolonged applause.

Smith was sentenced to penal servitude for life. It took him a full minute to understand, and he began to gibber and foam from the mouth, a stream of obscenities and curses on the Judge bursting from his lips. He struggled and bit the wardens who closed in on him and had to be carried bodily down the stairs. He was typical of the gunmen of any age: they are all gutless when the inevitable punishment for their wrongdoing is administered.

Chicago May was sent back to the United States just after the end of the First World War, and Smith, who was also American was deported soon afterwards.

Try some of these places: supermarkets, general stores, cafés, petrol stations, takeaway food outlets, tourist info centres, bakeries, caravan parks. And if you know someone on the mainland who's after a copy they can pick one up at the Shott Café in Wonthaggi.
